Cells are the building blocks of our body. When I heard that cells are like building blocks, I thought about rectangular Legos, but I was very surprised to learn that cells have many different shapes. When we say cells are building blocks we mean that our body is built from cells, but the cells are not shaped like blocks. Cells could be round like red blood cells, long and thin like striated muscle cells, or have long tentacles like nerve cells. Every kind of cell has its own shape. If I had a strong microscope, I'd like to see the shape of my hair cells.
